

21.2 Typical canal cross sections

Water enters the conveyance system through the intake structure located at the dam.

Depending on the topography of the terrain, this conveyance system may take the shape of the tunnels, canals, flumes or pipes. Geological factors do influence the type of the system to be adopted.

Some of the shapes of canals adopted are shown in following figures.

